

Be the difference you want for your world with the OSR Master's Program

The Organization Systems Renewal (OSR) Master's Program at Seattle University is accepting applications for the fall of 2010.

Here is your opportunity to achieve excellence as a designer and leader of change within your organization and community. Whether you are pursuing a career in organizational development or wanting to improve your leadership skills, the OSR Master's program is a rewarding investment for life. The 17th cohort is now forming; classes begin in September 2010. Applications are still being accepted.

OSR students, experiencing a unique learning environment:

- Take charge of their learning by developing and articulating their “Area of Engagement” and “Vocation”
- Learn in community through a dynamic and collaborative interplay of student and faculty perspectives
- Engage with prominent visiting faculty who are leading thinkers and practitioners
- Participate on 2 design teams to lead and deliver a portion of the curriculum and consult with an external client around a change project
- Demonstrate their ability to move theory into practice in an organizational setting with a capstone project
- Delve into an area of research to develop their own “theory of practice”
- Experience the support of a mentoring council to guide, clarify and support the student's learning
- Learn to renew the organizations and communities in which they play key leadership roles
